Fairmont Normal School Administration Building
Marion County, WV

Description

The first thing you observe upon entering the Fairmont State College campus is the Administration Building. It is a large three-story structure which sits atop a hill overlooking Locust Avenue. A symmetrical arrangement of stairs descends to Campus Drive, which encircles the building. These stairs, with large walls of cut stone, are an integral part of the building's setting. The building's foundation is constructed of concrete and clad in terra-cotta tile of 4" thickness. The masonry walls are sheathed in a light colored brick and ornamented with limestone and terra-cotta details.

The building's symmetrical facade is composed of eight ionic columns, with fluted shafts made of Indiana Blue Limestone, grandiose ornamented cornices/lintels, and flowing granite steps. Greek mouldings with dentils adorn the upper perimeter of the building.

The original building, built between 1915 and 1917, measured 265' by 65' in plan. It included the central portion of the building and its east wing; the west wing was planned for construction at a later date. In 1927 a matching west wing was added to house a larger library and to complete the building's symmetrical form. The building retains its original appearance and is well maintained by the College's administration.

Fairmont Normal School Administration Building
Marion County, WV

Statement of Significance

The Fairmont Normal School Administration Building is historically significant for its connection with the successful growth of the oldest of West Virginia's state teachers schools, all six of which were established shortly after the Civil War (the other five were Marshall College, West Liberty, Shepherd, Concord and Glenville). It is also significant in its association with the school's exceptional drama program and the founding of the national drama fraternity of Alpha Psi Omega. Lastly, it is significant architecturally as a distinctive example of the work of the Philadelphia architect Paul A. Davis III.

The Administrative Building is a majestic work by "one of the most influential of Philadelphia's Beaux-Arts trained architects" (Tatman, Moss, Biographical Dictionary). Paul Armon Davis III was an 1894 graduate of the University of Pennsylvania with a B.S. in Architecture. He was elected to the AIA and was the president of the Philadelphia chapter. "According to his AIA application, he entered the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris, attending both the Atelier Pascal and the Atelier Frequet. Davis was committed to the Beaux-Arts method of teaching architecture. Chief among his designs were the campus development at West Virginia University in Morgantown, W.V., and the American Bank and Trust Co. building in Philadelphia for which Davis, Dunlap, and Barney received the gold medal of the Architectural League of New York for 1929. (Tatman, Moss). Davis was a traditionalist and a practitioner of institutional architecture. He was a member of the Societe des Architectes Deplomes, the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, and the Beaux Arts Society.

The Fairmont Normal School, established in 1865 by Marion County Superintendent John N. Boyd, grew from discrepancies between eastern and western Virginians. "Virginia made numerous provisions for education over the years, but never provided free primary schools for all citizens. The framers of the constitution of the new state of West Virginia in 1862, reflected Virginia's aristocratic attitude toward public education and provided for a state-wide system of free public schools for all children to be supported by the interest from a school fund which they provided and by general taxation" (Turner).

John Boyd's intent in establishing the Normal School was to instruct new teachers, as well as to provide brush-up skills for the established teachers. There was great concern for the supply of teachers in the area, and the standards had become very low. "With the conclusion of the war in 1865, West Virginians were able to give more serious attention to problems of education and particularly to the need for teachers" (Turner). In Fairmont, plans were discussed immediately for the construction of a building, but funds were difficult to find. The state legislature came through with an allocation of five thousand dollars for the purpose and erection of buildings. There were two qualifications: "one provided that the money must be refunded to the state if the school ever failed to operate for eight months in succession, and the other required the governor to appoint five 'discreet citizens' as commissioners to consult with the board of directors and to disburse the state's money (Turner).

The first school building for the new normal school was constructed in 1867, and was located on Quincy and Main Streets. The school progressed and became so populated, a larger building was needed. In 1892 the stone was laid for a second building located on Fairmont Avenue.

In 1912 the school passed from its preparatory school phase to a college program for teachers, but remained under the name of normal school until the 1920s. Student enrollment expanded, and there was need for a larger building. Under the instruction of the school's president, Joseph Rosier, "a new site of 18 1/2 acres was purchased on Locust Avenue and construction of a new building, which was to be the present Administration Building, was begun in 1915" (Turner). The site was previously known as the Kennedy farm. The cornerstone was laid on October 11, 1915, by Lodge Number Nine of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. A copper casket was placed in the cornerstone, containing: a normal catalog, a state directory, a Marion County directory, a copy of The Mound for 1915, the faculty list for 1915, the July issue of the Normal Bulletin, letterhead and envelopes of the school and its departments, pictures of the original normal and the Fairmont Avenue normal, a picture of the 1915 student body, a program of the exercises of the day, current copies of the Fairmont West Virginian and the Fairmont Times, the reports of the Board of Control and the Board of Regents for 1914-15, a West Virginia Panama Exposition badge, records of the senior class of 1916 including a class medal, roll and yell, and a copy of the West Virginia School Journal.

The original construction planned for a main building with east wing only. The auditorium was to be supported by 18" square brick piers. Ductwork for the building was run underground. The new building was thought to be a fine architectural achievement, blending monumental design with the most practical and functional considerations.

The ground floor housed the Lyceum Society Room (YMCA) and the Mozart Society Room (YWCA), along with the auditorium, library and administrative offices. The second floor housed science, biology, chemistry, music and domestic art classrooms.

One of the most significant events in the Fairmont school's history was the formation of the Alpha Psi Omega drama club. The club, formed in 1923 as The Masquers, wanted to secure a national charter. They were turned down by the existing fraternity of Alpha Psi and by the National Collegiate Players. Paul Opp, a speech teacher in the administrative building, contacted E. Turner Stump of Marshall College for the purpose of calling a state speech meeting. At the meeting Alpha Psi Omega was formed and Opp was named secretary of the first chartered school. Following Fairmont, several schools obtained charters. In 1926 Alpha Psi Omega published Playbill Magazine. Currently there are nearly a thousand chapters of Alpha Psi Omega located in every U.S. state, and some foreign countries.

In 1928 Harry Leeper, a drama teacher at East Fairmont High School and a former student of Opp, approached his Opp concerning a letter he had received from Earl Bank of Casper, Wyoming. The question arose about having an extension of Alpha Psi Omega for high schools. Following several after-school meetings, the National Thespian Society was formed, named for the first greek actor, Thespis. Dramatics, the national thespian magazine also had its roots at Fairmont State Normal School.

In 1992 Fairmont State College celebrated its 125th year of existence. The school has been called "a vital part of the life of its community, and a strong influence in the educational development of our state" (Times, 1912). As in the past, Fairmont State College continues to contribute significantly to the community at large.
